(1820-1887) EADS, James Buchanan

Eminent American engineer and inventor. Born at Lawrenceburg, Ind. Moved to St Louis (1833). In 1839 he became clerk on a Mississippi steamboat and studied engineering by himself. He built, within 100 days, seven iron clad gunboats of his own design for the use of the government on the Mississippi. He also constructed the bridge across the Mississippi at St Louis (1867-1874); one of the finest structures of its kind in the world. Eads undertook at his own risk the task of deepening the channel at the mouth of the Miss. and by constructing of jetties successfully carried the enterprise to completion (1875-1879). The last years of his life were devoted to extensive engineering operations.
